Found this info while searching for my problem. Though not sure why the installer is not detecting the OS is 64 bit and installing the correct MSI file. A: Try using crredist.x86.msi instead of crredist.x64.msi. That should solve it. The 64-bit version installs the 32-bit version of Crystal Reports. A History of the Sierra Nevada - Stronico ===== jayjay71 This is a very comprehensive and interesting read. The author mentions a large number of so-called ""rock" formations in this story. I think this is a common misunderstanding of what a rock formation is and can be. Usually a rock formation or rock formation is simply a body of rock that forms naturally and was not shaped by humans. In order to know whether a rock formation was formed by humans, you need to know all the bio/geological conditions at the time the rock was formed. Take a trip to the area where the rock formation is located and take a look. Ask around among the people in that area. Also get a good view of the formation. Figure out how it fits into the environment it is in. In the case of Mono Lake (home to Lake Mono) the rock formations at the bottom of the lake were formed by Tertiary volcanic activity. These can be seen on the lake bed by the ripples as they move through the mud. All the limestone formations around the lake are younger than these volcanos and are also naturally formed. A big mountain is no more special than a big hill. Thank you for posting this. ----- stronico I found the attached file interesting because of its lack of attention to detail. When I hit a story that is not in the first-person, I like to be able to go deeper with my research and in this case, the posted article did not provide any. This site (not sure if the post is "advertorial") seems to literally repost anything. Perhaps f678ea9f9e
